About the Author

BARBERTON - There's a saying that goes, "When the emotion is love, everyone is a poet". But local 30-something poet Aneil Morgan seems to be an eternal romantic at heart, and for him poetry is part of his existence - something very personal, which he takes very serious. Aneil is currently in the process of publishing a collection of his work, For the love of poetry, written in simple language so that young and old can share in it. But, he already has plans for book two, and says that he has kept some of his "high-phrase" poems for the sequel. Aneil has been writing since an early age. "I always found it hard to speak out and make conversation. The only way I could express myself was through poetry. I grew up in a strict household, always helping others. Later on I developed the skill to write poetry, the words just flowed," he says. But although others wanted to take advantage of his gift, Aneil never abused it. "A lot of acquaintances asked me to write their loved ones poems, but it would be cheating to use my words and not their own. I have a strong belief that the way into someone's heart is through your own words." And that's when friends, family and local teachers started urging him to publish his work. He says that although he was sceptic at the time, they would describe it as very enjoyable. However, Aneil's heart was broken when him and his girlfriend broke up. "I was devastated, never thought I would love again until Brittney Mary-Jane, also known as Chante, came along," he shares. He poetically describes her, now his girlfriend, as being very special and her heart pure, which made him fall in love with her. "It all began with the poetry, and I knew she is my true love. She also urged me to publish and to me it was a sign that it's the right time and the right thing to do. My love for her brought me to finally reveal my work." And so Aneil went on to write a whole bunch of love poems dedicated to his love. If you are interested in reading his work, email him at ftlop01@gmail.com or contact him on 2779-420-7262.
