Marcus Baird has been called a lot of things: Scottish bastard, heartless, ruthless, but thanks to his new neighbor, he could add ginger buff guy. The ruthless part is true, at least. His current occupation as a handyman is a front to fuel a bidding war between his former employer and the next private equity firm in his sights—an undertaking that should have all his attention, but Ivy makes him an offer he cannot refuse.

When Ivy Stewart imagined losing her virginity, she was at least a decade younger, a yes away from marriage, and her perfect man would make sweet, slow love to her. Waiting for that dream to unfold has kept her watching life from the sidelines. She's done biding her time. It's foolhardy to choose Marcus. He's a man with secrets and an ugly past, but he's honest about what their relationship will be, charming and...he's very good with his hands.

Since Marcus took Ivy into his bed, he's lived a lie. He could be the man she needs. He isn't a workaholic and he doesn't really have a heart of stone. But it's only a matter of time before Ivy finds out the truth, and once again he's nothing but a Scottish bastard.

A great love story that will capture your heart!

By KimGM

Melissa Blue has done it again: made me absolutely adore the sexy Scotsmen she creates. Marcus, our ruthless CEO who's pretending to be a handyman to get the company and the position he wants, is very, very sexy. And he thinks he doesn't have the capacity to fall in love. Now, I usually avoid any stories about ruthless businessmen, because they usually bore me. But Marcus and his backstory are quite intriguing. And then there is Ivy--who is a virgin even though she's closing in on thirty--but she's not one of these insipid ones that goes around saying "holy cow!" or talking about her "inner goddess". She's kickass and she feels authentic and real.

What I really enjoyed about Scot Appeal (and the entire Under the Kilt series) is that the relationships and the conflicts the main characters experience feels very grounded and realistic. These are adults dealing with adult problems and behaving like proper adults and not as overgrown teenagers. And the way race is addressed is very subtle without it becoming an overblown sticking point.

Following this story of unlikely neighbors who become lovers was so much fun. I admit: I ignored my yummy Swedish hubby to finish reading this book and he was a good sport about it. I will have to make it up to him this weekend. :)

I loved Scot Appeal and the chemistry between Marcus and Ivy, and I think you will too.

Love those Scots!

By Mel

This is the 5th installment in the Under the Kilt series and it doesn't disappoint. Marcus is a flawed hero (what better one is there...lol) with some issues regarding love and his ability to give it. He's plotting his next move work wise when he meets Ivy, the heroine and his next door neighbor. Their witty banter and sexual tension was immediate but the fact that Ivy is a virgin is what twists the plot of this story a bit. I loved Ivy and Marcus together and enjoyed seeing how they fit so well together though they both tried their best to keep it casual and unattached. Melissa Blue didn't disappoint in the steaminess of this couple's scenes which were hot! I also loved that we got to get a glimpse of the lives of the Baird men and their loves. I thought this was a great read and hope the author continues this series with more hot Scotsmen.

Hot Ginger!!!!

By boogy

I love her writing and I love those Scots!!!! Hot.

For as beautiful as they are they also have their heart aches and burdens. Marcus was a troubled man who thinks he doesn't deserve love or needs it. Ivy has taken her Grandmother's life word on love and marriage to heart which leaves her a 28 year old virgin. Wondering how time has passed her by. She had this idea that the perfect man would find her and marry her...good luck with that honey. We get to witness these two journeys into love in spite of their selves..

I enjoyed their story but at times Ivy seemed a bit childish. Giggling mess around her sister sometimes and had a lot of questions most times for him. Women who want answers but don't particularly want to give any.
